Dear Mr. Murr;

Harold left this a.m. for New Orleans and expects to be back around the 15th of July.

I've spoken with him by phone, told him of your letter, and he asked me to tell you that as soon as possible after his return he will get to work on the introduction for your book. While he is away, he will be too busy and his attention will be too divided to do any constructive writing.

Other parts of your letter he will reply to directly when he returns.

I hope the baby has not been relegated to the backfield in deference to the book. You don't mention him in your letter. He must be developing personality by now.

Sincerely,

Lillian Weisberg
